
narrow, winding streets of the old town we came across blind beggars smiling and playing a game of soccer with three simple-looking, plump little dogs. Wirtz's film also explores a country that does not rely on tourism. A video editor at the city's cinema, Iwajaru Hiranand, said she had not encountered women complaining about drinking or getting too drunk. He began drinking milk at 10 and continued until he was 33, when he settled on beer, which he says is a better source of vitamins and energy. It's the time of the year when people create movie posters, try to guess what movie is coming out and buy movie ticket.

But for the people of Rajshahi city, Bangladesh's third largest city, only one thing matters - find a perfect puppy for the festive season. It's a tradition that's been around in Bangladesh for over a decade. Rich kids buy their puppies for a 1,500- to 2,000-rupee (about 30-40 euros) fee, or they'll find a "sale puppy" that will most likely look sick. A year later, the rich kid can sell the puppy for much more. Over time, the city's streets become a dog park. Puppies have been abandoned, retired and stolen in search of a nice home. Some of the lost puppies are rescued from the clutches of the city's many animal traders. A puppy's fate is determined largely by the type of diet it has been given and the care and quality of the home it has been left behind in. It is a dirty job.

The streets of the old town are littered with beer bottles, dirty diapers, dirty and fried food and dead puppies. Iwajaru Hiranand, 22, who works in the cinema as an assistant editor said: "At the beginning of the year, I saw some puppies in the streets and thought to bring them home. "But my family did not want to adopt them because they were not in shape, so I left them. If you take a puppy, feed it with a lot of milk, keep it clean and give it health care, then
